Their “affordability” agenda got off on the wrong foot.

New York City's first lady Rama Duwaji appeared to wear $630 “artisan” leather boots from a high-end designer to her Democratic socialist husband Zohran Mamdani's mayoral swearing-in ceremony — a luxury look that flew in the face of the politician's “everyman” image, eagle-eyed critics said Thursday.

Duwaji, a 28-year-old artist, gave more socialite than socialist on New Year's Day as she apparently rocked one of the fashion house Miista's pricey boot designs — one which is said to be crafted from “vegetable tan cow leather” and feature an “ultra-cushioned memory foam insole.”

The fashion firm charges $630 a pair for the so-called "Shelley Boots," which feature a 6-centimeter (2.3-inch) heel and a lace-up back.

But her high-end fashion statement — which came as she stood next to Mamdani while he took the oath of office just after midnight — is out of touch, considering Hizzoner's equity-for-all policies that include tax hikes on the rich along with his man-of-the-people air, critics said.

"They're $600. But when he seizes the means of production, everyone will be able to afford them," one critic proclaimed.

Another user wrote: "It's kind of weird and off base to be focusing on what designer items she's wearing when he's trying to promote policies of financial stability and equity for all. Let's focus on what matters. This is bad optics, honestly."

Duwaji, an animator and illustrator, also wore a black coat and skirt with gleaming earrings to the ceremony, where she held the centuries-old Quran on which Mamdani rested his hand.
